Comings and Goings:

Congressional Resignations, Retirements, etc. - The next election is approximately 3 months away (approximately 97 days). In November 2018, all 435 Members of the House of Representatives are up for reelection and 35 total Senate seats are up for election (33 of the 100 Senate seats are up for election + 1 special election in Minnesota + 1 likely special election to fill the seat of retiring Senator Cochran (R-Mississippi)).

Three Senators have announced they will not seek reelection and 57 House Members have announced that they are either retiring, running for other office, or have already lost their primary for their current seat or the primary for another office (and one House Member has died). Interestingly, 8 full committee chairmen in the House of Representatives - and the Speaker of the House - are leaving at the end of the 115th Congress. In addition, of the 35 Senate seats up for election in 2018, 17 of those seats are from coastal states and 8 of the seats up for election are currently held by members of the Senate Commerce, Science, and Transportation Committee.

Timing for the remainder of the 115th Congress:

With the elections coming soon, Members of both the House and Senate will be spending more time in their districts meeting with constituents. The House of Representatives is currently out of session for the August District Work Period. (Note: While the House currently is not in session, this does not mean that hearings cannot be held. I will let you know of any hearing of potential interest as I hear about them.) As of July 31, 2018, the schedule for the House of Representatives notes 19 days of session between the August District Work Period and October 12 (the target for returning to their districts before the election) and 16 days of session after the election (lame duck session).

The Senate has decided that they will only take one week for the August District Work Period (the week of August 6th) and will remain in session for the rest of August.

This schedule is always subject to change.

Appropriations – Fiscal Year 2019:

Of the 12 appropriations bills generally enacted by Congress, none have been signed into law for Fiscal Year 2019. Both the House and Senate Appropriations Committees have reported all 12 appropriations bills out of Committee.

According to a Senate staffer, Congress is likely to consider these 12 bills in packages – probably 4 or 5 packages.

Both the House and the Senate have passed a package containing: the Energy and Water appropriations bill; the Legislative Branch appropriations bill; and the Military Construction-Veterans Affairs appropriations bill. The differences between the packages must still be negotiated and the package must then pass both house of Congress again before going to the President for his signature.

The House of Representatives has passed a package containing: the Interior appropriations bill; and the Financial Services and General Government appropriations bill. The Senate has not yet considered this package.

The House of Representatives has also passed the Defense appropriations bill. The Senate has not yet considered this bill.

According to staff, the Commerce/Justice/Science appropriations bill is likely to be considered packaged up with the Homeland Security appropriations bill and State /Foreign Operations appropriations bill.

The schedule for consideration of these bills or packages is unknown; however, recent press reports have speculated that consideration of at least a few of the packages may be pushed until after the election in November - which will require a Continuing Resolution at some point before the end of Fiscal Year 2018 (September 30, 2018) in order for those agencies not appropriated to remain operating. Stay tuned.
